How do I take notes in here?

In the 1986 blockbuster Ferris Bueller's Day Off, actor Ben Stein plays Mr. Lorensax, a monotone economics teacher. If you've seen the scene where he's discussing the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act ("Anyone? Anyone? Voodoo economics."), that's what comes to mind when many people hear the word "lecture". Trust me. That is NOT how I lecture!

My lectures are a cross between a rock concert and the History Channel... rolled into a WWE match and brought to you by a Red Bull-infused Morning Show. (In fact, during the 2020 Pandemic, I broadcasted my classroom and these lectures as "135 Live!") Filled with visuals aplenty, music, humorous anecdotes, and zany outfits, these lectures are an EXPERIENCE. Guaranteed! I proudly write my own material and make sure it aligns with the state curriculum and is meticulously researched from sources that contain a multi-cultural spectrum of perspectives, beliefs, affiliations, orientations, and identities.

Long story short, I take my lectures seriously... which means YOU will take them seriously as well!

While I lecture, you will write down the necessary material in spiral notebooks (that I'll provide). These lectures will be projected on a large screen in my classroom. All lectures are also available as PDFs on the class website (DrHartnell.com).

You may access all lectures by clicking on the "Lectures & Lessons" button from each unit's landing page.

Once in the "Lectures & Lessons" page, clicking on the different tabs opens up a PDF version identical to the presentation used in class. You are encouraged to cross-reference your class notes with these and should access them if you are absent.

The screenshots below show what to pay attention to when reviewing and taking notes from a lecture in this class.

This is the title slide of the lecture presentation. It will appear at the start of every lecture in the unit.

This slide tells you which lecture you're viewing. The "AH 2.19" means "American History Unit 2, Lecture 19".

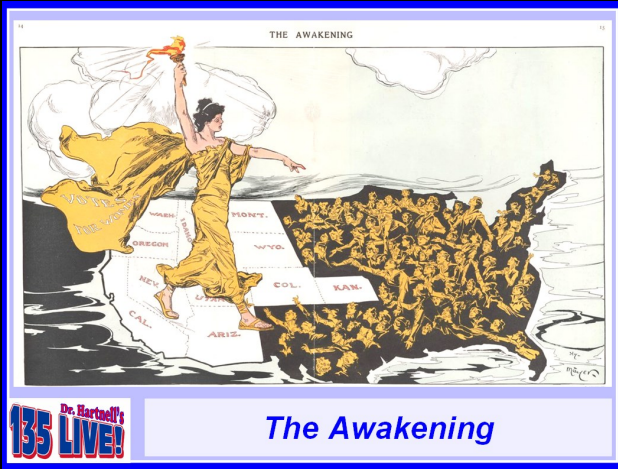

Each lecture contains "ONE BIG THING". This is the overarching question to think about as you go through the material.

When taking notes from these slides, write down all material (names, dates, battles, terms, etc.) that appear in RED.

There are plenty of visuals throughout my lectures to complement the material... and my outfit that day.

This is the final slide before we revisit the "ONE BIG THING". 1BTs are mental questions and aren't meant to be submitted.
