Canto #32: 5:00pm, April 9th –
Ninth Circle: Traitors to Kin,
Country, Friends & Masters

The river flowing from Circle 7 into Circle 8 now freezes in a circular plain at the bottom of Hell. The metaphor is clear, for the heart of the Traitor was the coldest heart of all.

The lake is called Cocytus [Ko-kite-us] and contains 4 rings that freeze 4 groups: Traitors to Kin; Traitors to Country; Traitors to Guests & Friends; Traitors to Their Masters.

Canto #34: 7:00pm, April 9th –
Ninth Circle: The Devil

The traitors under the ice here are so deep we never know who they are. Only the greatest traitor of all, Lucifer, and the 3 souls he crunches in his jaws, are identifiable. Cast from Heaven for rebelling against God, Lucifer (Satan, Dis, Beelzebub, etc.) is fixed for eternity with his upper body protruding into Hell. Frozen into the ice from which flow all the rivers of guilt, Lucifer tries to escape by batting his wings but just freezes himself into place.

Canto #34: 7:00pm, April 9th –
Ninth Circle: The Devil

Lucifer has 6 wings, a pair beneath each face. From the wings under the face of hatred proceeds the wind of fraud or malice; from the pair under the face of ignorance comes the wind of violence; and from the pair under the face of impotence comes the wind of incontinence. These make up the 3 categories of sins in Hell (incontinence, violence, and fraud).

Canto #34: 7:00pm, April 9th –
Ninth Circle: The Devil

Judas Iscariot, the betrayer of Jesus Christ, is chewed by the red face of hatred. His head is stuck in one of Satan's jaws while his legs dangle uselessly outside.

Canto #34: 7:00pm, April 9th –
Ninth Circle: The Devil

Marcus Brutus and Cassius, betrayers of their country through their assassination of Julius Caesar, are only slightly less abominable (remember, Dante is an Italian). Brutus is placed in the black face of ignorance and Cassius in the whitish-yellow face of impotence. Both are placed inside feet first so their heads stick out.

Canto #34: 7:00pm, April 9th –
Ninth Circle: The Devil

Virgil announces that their journey of Hell is complete. Climbing down Satan's hairy back, Virgil leads Dante through a crack in the ice and out the other side. From this point on they no longer descend because they have passed through the center of the Earth and face an upward climb to the Mountain of Purgatory. Without stopping, they follow a winding path toward Earth's surface. Just before dawn on Easter Sunday, they emerge again to see the stars.

Remember, this is what the poem actually looks like when read in terza rima (third rhyme), a three-line stanza rhyming pattern (aba, bcb, cdc).

Canto #34: 7:00pm, April 9th – Ninth Circle: The Devil

Breast-deep in the ice was set
The Emperor of the dolorous realm; but yet
So huge he towered that I should seem more fit
With giants to consort, than a giant compare
With one arm only. He, that once so fair
Could walk assured in Heaven, the lordliest there
Beneath his Maker, fills this glacial pit
If by his woe we price his earlier weal,
Or judge his glory by his aspect now,
Well may he fount affliction. For one head
I saw three faces. One was fiery red.
The others slanting from each shoulder rose
To form one crest that shapes creation's woes.
One pallid yellow, one the sable hue
Of those who wander from the tropic land
Wherefrom the sources of the Nile expand.
There were two wings the three foul heads below Such bird to suit. I never saw such spread of ocean canvas to the wind: but these Were bat-like, plumeless, and the wind they bred, they flapped unceasing – caused the glacier freeze down which we traversed.

With six eyes he wept,
The while a sinner in each mouth he kept,
And chewed, and loosed not.
Tears and foam unite with dribbling blood, that spruts from every bite down his three chins.
The midmost was not bit, So much as torn. At times his back was flayed, All bare of skin.

“That soul that most endures,
Whose head Apollyon (Satan) in his mouth hath got, Whose legs kick outward, is Iscariot” My Master told, “of those whose heads may quit.
The teeth that chew them,
down the swarthier chin
Is Brutus dangling. Mark how silently
He writhes. The comrade of his doom is he Who shared that treason, Cassius. But the night is rising in the world without, and we Must hasten. All is seen that lies herein,
And hence depart we.”
